

As stated in the examples provided above, while we do own our mistakes and publish corrections using the same channels as before, these occurrences are rare and thus are not a focal point of our internal reports. There is one change that was operated within the last few years after the need for it has been made clear through frequent interactions - Factual changed its methodology to feature more intuitive verdicts, as our team understood that the established English terminology does not fully translate into Romanian. This being said, the original verdicts of “partially false” and “partially true” were deemed as more or less identical in meaning when translated into Romanian and the need for different terms was highlighted. The change was made and now the methodology is easier to understand and the difference between verdicts is clearer for our audience. This being the case, we will make any changes necessary if the team identifies a specific need that is not met by current procedures or methodology.